

Art: The Museum of Everything
by Martine Bakker

18.04.16

The question "What is art?" is a philosophical issue. You can see art in everything. One is obsessed with consuming Rembrandt's The Night Watch with a bus full of Japanese, the other wants nothing more than to roll over a peanut butter floor. Are you open-minded and do you like new experiences? Then check out (until May 22 with CJP discount) The Museum of Everything at Kunsthal Rotterdam. Here you can see work by artists who - without a diploma from art school - have made great art. There are gigantic installations by rebellious types who do not play by the book, and you can think about the philosophical question: are you anything if you do not have a degree for it? Guaranteed that you are the Plato of your group of friends after this experience.

Image: Willem van Genk, Courtesy of The Museum of Everything - Kunsthal Rotterdam.